

PRIME MINISTER KING PAYS VISIT HERE

Schools Will Open As Usual, Expects M.O.H.

No Infantile Paralysis In Town As Yet, Says Dr. J. H. Wesley

DESCRIBES SYMPTOMS

"Though we have no cases of infantile paralysis in town, everyone is just expecting another epidemic this summer, and, while most of the cases come during the very hot weather, the danger will not be completely past till late in the fall, winter epidemics being very unusual," Dr. J. H. Wesley, M.O.H., stated this week.

"The disease is spoken of as polio-myelitis by health authorities, but it is better not to try to disguise the disease by any uncommon name not generally understood by the public," Dr. Wesley said. "As the epidemics are becoming an annual affair, the public is giving the disease more attention and most people are becoming acquainted with its nature, symptoms and results."

"Infantile paralysis is an infectious disease which involves certain parts of the brain and spinal cord, producing permanent paralysis and atrophy of the groups of muscles that are represented or activated by the affected parts of the brain and cord."

"The disease is not what the name would indicate, for most of the cases are of school or 'teen' age, infants and people over 20 being pretty well exempt."

"The symptoms of the disease for the first few days are not different from those of many other simpler diseases, which means often it cannot be diagnosed in its earliest stages, and it is only after the young person has been sick with headache, backache, fever, vomiting, cold, cough, sore throat or diarrhoea, accompanied by prostration, lying about for a few days, that the real significance of the sickness makes its appearance, when the mother notices that the sick one cannot stand or walk as usual, or perhaps a weakness in one arm may be noticed."

"Every epidemic leaves its quota of paralytics with splints, crutches and braces to wage an uneven battle in a hard world, and points where science yet has fields to conquer."

"No, we are glad to say we have no cases of infantile paralysis within our borders, but we do not know how soon we may. In the meantime we may expect all the schools to open as usual."

NEVER CARED FOR SO WELL

Mayor Dr. S. J. Boyd is in receipt of a letter from J. D. Foster, local manager of the Bell Telephone Co., at Wallaceburg, expressing appreciation of the treatment accorded to his brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Snyder, who were involved in a serious accident on Yonge St. near Holland Landing a few weeks ago.

The mayor is asked to convey "our heartfelt appreciation to all of those citizens of your town who were so kind and helpful to us after the accident, and in this would like to embody particularly the officials, doctors and staff of your hospital, the local and Provincial police, and those merchants and citizens who so willingly came to our assistance in our efforts for the comfort of our injured relatives."

"In the course of my long service in my chosen profession I have travelled very extensively, and can conscientiously say never before have I met with so much kindness from the citizens of any community, as was extended to me during my short stay in Newmarket."

"Those kindnesses are such as I shall not readily forget, nor will those who are so dear to me, and sincerely trust that the time may not be far distant when I shall have an opportunity of reciprocating in some way for the same."

Mrs. Snyder was a patient at York County hospital. Other members of the party were guests of Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Gilroy while in Newmarket.

GIRL GUIDES MEET

The Girl Guides will meet on Sept. 8, at 7 p. m., in the Bugle Band hall. Any girls from the ages of 11-16 wishing to join will be welcomed. Any Girl Guide Auxiliary members will be welcomed also, states Mrs. Althea Vanzant, captain of Girl Guides.

STUART SCOTT YARD IS SITE FOR CARNIVAL

Wheels Of Fortune Turn To Aid Newmarket Youngsters

LIONS HOLD BIG NIGHT

A monster evening of fun, music and merriment for all is assured those who visit the Stuart Scott school grounds tonight to participate in the carnival being held there by the Newmarket Lions club.

Both the Citizens' Band and the R.S.A. Bugle Band will be in attendance. The Louis-Farr championship fight will be broadcast from loudspeakers so that those attending need not hurry home to listen to the big event.

Games new and old will be there for those who want to tilt with chance in the interests of Newmarket kiddies.

The wives of the club members will serve refreshments, and home-cooked pies, cakes and cookies will be on sale.

An expert tea-cup reader will be present, and she is alleged to be able to foretell the deaths of rich uncles in Australia with amazing precision.

A large list of valuable prizes will be drawn for and there will be a separate draw for a full-blooded wire-hair terrier.

Attention is drawn to the change in location of the carnival. Due to the illness of Ken Robertson, it will be held on the Stuart Scott school grounds.

Pupils Of Shrubmount School Have Been Credit To Union Section

TALK GIVEN TO W. I.

This interesting history of Shrubmount school is particularly appropriate as the school bells ring again. This was a paper given by Mrs. John Skinner of Cedar Valley at a meeting of Pine Orchard Women's Institute held at the home of Mrs. Charles Flintoff, Main St., Newmarket, on Aug. 18. Mrs. Wesley Williams, convener of the historical committee, was in charge of the program.

School section No. 1, Whitchurch and East Gwillimbury, was one of the later school sections to be organized in these townships. The children in this part of East Gwillimbury attended Franklin school and those of Whitchurch went to Pine Orchard or Vivian before this school section was formed.

Will Reid, now of Pine Orchard, writes: "Some of the people interested petitioned councils of East Gwillimbury and Whitchurch to form a union section but there was opposition and it was some time before a section could be organized. In the meantime, some interested neighbors took up a collection and hired a Mr. Hamilton to teach. This was my first teacher in this section."

When the section was organized in 1870, the first trustees were Francis Boake, John Miller and James Hammett, with Francis Boake as the first secretary. Those responsible for urging the formation of the school section were: Francis Boake, John Miller, James Hammett, William Grose, Wm. Reid, Sr., Arthur Goodwin, Peter Megan, John Graham and Nelson Foote.

J. W. C. Switzer was the first teacher after the section was formed and it was he who named it Shrubmount school. He married a Miss Tremayne, daughter of an Anglican clergyman of Newmarket. He taught here two and a half years.

CONDITION IS WORSE

Thomas Hall, former chief constable, who has been ill for some time, is in an unconscious condition. Great concern is felt by all citizens concerning his critical condition.

Mrs. Wrigley, who knew Shrubmount school both as a pupil and teacher, writes: "A small church was built on a site that my father, Francis Boake, donated to the Methodist church. This building was used for the school during the week and services on Sunday. It was furnished with pews which were not very comfortable for children. Those used for senior scholars had a board nailed on them with a shelf below for books."

There was a blackboard on the west wall and a large map of the world on the east wall at the back of the room. We would sit on the top of the pews facing the back of the room and all about the names of rivers, mountains, etc., about three times each, as Mr. Switzer pointed them out with a long pointer. Around the top of the walls were hung pictures of animals and birds. These were used in a similar manner for teaching our nature study lesson in those days.

"We had no school-yard, so used to play on the road in summer and on the hills of our field in the winter. Mr. Switzer got a croquet set for us, with which we played just outside the door."

Free Methodist Minister Here Appointed To Orillia

Rev. R. L. Casement, Bracebridge, Comes To Newmarket

Rev. E. J. Lee, minister of the Free Methodist church here, will preach his last Newmarket sermon on Sunday. He is going to Orillia, as a result of new appointments made at the annual conference of the church at Kingston during the weekend.

His place will be taken here by Rev. R. L. Casement, who has been preaching at Bracebridge for the past four years. Rev. N. S. Perry, who has been an evangelist of the Free Methodist church here, has been appointed to the Bracebridge circuit.

Rev. J. T. King of Belhaven has been appointed to the Perth Road and Pine Grove circuit near Kingston. His place in Belhaven will be taken by Rev. W. C. Shelding, who has been serving the Hillsdale and Crown Hill circuit.

Rev. Roy Sedore, brother of Norman Sedore of Newmarket, has been preaching at Orillia. He is being appointed to the Harrowsmith circuit, near Kingston.

BUGLERS VISIT FRIENDS KIRK

The R. S. A. Bugle Band paraded to the Friends Church on Sunday morning and heard an excellent sermon by the minister, Burton Hill.

Speaking on the subject of restlessness, Mr. Hill said, "It is not the transient, the one who spends a month or a year in a town, who adds most to the life of the community. The newcomer may bring in an idea, but it is the permanent residents who work it out."

The regular church music was augmented by a vocal solo given by Donald Galbraith of Aurora.

AIR MINISTER TELLS STORY OF HIS FLIGHT

Renewed Prosperity Credited To King Government At Picnic

W. P. MULOCK IS HOST

One of the most wonderful experiences of his life was the description of the Hon. C. D. Howe, federal minister of transport, of his one-day flight from Montreal to Vancouver, at the W. P. Mulock, M.P., picnic at Woodbridge on Saturday.

Host of the day, Mr. Mulock spoke briefly, welcoming his guests and touching on the record of the Mackenzie King administration.

Morgan Baker, M.L.A. for North York, defended the record of the Hepburn government.

Other speakers included George McPhee, M.P., Yorkton, Sask., and Hugh Plaxton, M.P., Toronto. The program of entertainment included sports and a baby show. Newmarket Citizens' Band was in attendance and contributed some splendid music.

In discussing his trip from Montreal to Vancouver by air, Mr. Howe told of the "forest areas of northern Ontario and the great mining districts. Flying high over Manitoba we could see the splendid wheat crops of that province stretching seemingly for miles in all directions. Over Saskatchewan we saw the ravages of a seven-years drought. On my way back I stopped and talked with some of the Saskatchewan farmers. They have confidence in the future, and live in the hope that next year will bring good crops and prosperity."

"Rapid air transport will bring about revolutionary changes in Canadian life," Mr. Howe declared. "When you can travel from coast to coast in one day, national unity will be helped more than it has ever been by any other factor."

"I am convinced from the trip to Vancouver that three-quarters of Canada is enjoying prosperity. There are still signs of depression in the drought areas of the west and in some of the larger centres of population."

"I think I am safe in saying that it will be only a short time until every able-bodied man in Canada will have an opportunity to work."

"When we came into office Canada's trade and industrial life was stagnant, and we had huge surpluses of products which we could not sell in spite of the Conservative government's treaty with Great Britain. Tariffs were too high. We made agreements with the United States and Japan, smoothing out difficulties with the latter country. Now we have inexhaustible markets."

"The effects were immediate. Railway traffic has increased faster than we were able to supply rolling-stock. Twenty thousand young men were working in unemployment camps when we took office. We offered them regular employment at standard wages keeping up roadbeds, and 10,000 of them responded."

"My greatest problem is the C.N.R.," said Mr. Howe. "When we came into office we found the national system saddled with an astronomical debt on which it was impossible for the road to pay even the interest."

"We wrote down the C.N.R.'s debt to a reasonable figure. "As a result of the trade agreements we made, our foreign trade has greatly increased. Wheat has been boosted from 85 cents to $1.50, and the price of cheese and many other farm products has gone up. Our task is not yet completed, but we are well on the way to prosperity."

A 16-hour radio broadcasting service to replace the present six-hour schedule will be inaugurated, Mr. Howe announced.

"When we assumed office we decided that the only way to improve radio in Canada was to place control of it in the hands of a man thoroughly familiar with radio entertainment, and we believe that we found the right man in Major Gladstone Murray," Mr. Howe said. "There has been a tremendous improvement since we placed him in charge. In the same way we placed at the head of the C.N.R. a man who understood railroading through and through."

Former Chief Justice Meets Party Head At Station

PREMIER ON HOLIDAY

Canada's prime minister, the Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, paid Newmarket a visit last night when he stopped to visit Sir William Mulock, on his way to a family reunion to be held today in Barrie.

Among those gathered to meet him at the station were Sir William Mulock and his grandson, William Mulock, M.P., Aubrey Davis, P. W. Pearson, Deputy-Reeve Joseph Vale.

When the Era's reporter was introduced, the prime minister recalled its former editor, Lyman Jackson.

"Yes, indeed," he said. "Is it still going strong? Good!" he exclaimed, when he noted the emphatic nod of this reporter.

Mr. King's private car remained on the siding over night.

Advantages of Newmarket For Police Office Urged

Northern Councils Wish New Police Office Located Here

Mayor Dr. S. J. Boyd today sent a letter to York County council setting forth the advantages of Newmarket as a location for the new northern police office. Dr. Boyd said that better police protection was needed in the northern areas and felt that the police office should be here where the police court is.

North Gwillimbury and Sutton councils have passed resolutions endorsing Newmarket as the location for the office.

East, West Meet In Glamour Of Vancouver, Hobo Finds

Easterner Rides "Gats" With Lumbermen In B. C. Camps

By DON KYLE

East is east and west is west and the twain do meet. And that meeting place is Vancouver. Vancouver is where the cross-roads of the Orient contact the great West. Vancouver is the Canadian San Francisco, the cosmopolitan city of our west. It is a place of history, romance, glamour, atmosphere with still enough touch of the matter-of-fact world to make it one of the world's greatest sea ports.

It was many years ago that Captain George Vancouver landed on Spanish Banks to settle peacefully for all time the score with the raiding Spanish pirates. Little did the unsuspecting Englishman guess that over 200 years later a band of vagabond Canadians would pitch their tent on the shores of English Bay where only blood-thirsty Bela Coolos once roamed.

"The Indians themselves would have uttered many a war-whoop if they had known that 100 years ago there, and that they did in 1830; a cluster of wooden houses, a trading-post, the saloon; that grew to a thriving and attractive city of 350,000 with a Hudson's Bay store and a dozen new hotels to replace their earlier counterparts."

But don't think that Vancouver

VOTE $2,500 FOR STREETS

The town council voted $2,500 for the repair of Millard and Lorne Aves. at a special meeting last evening.

The public works committee asked the approval of the council before going further with the work. Millard Ave. has already been repaved between Main St. and Victoria Ave. The removal of the bump at Queen and Main Sts. has been done by the county. The council authorized the spending of $2,500. If the committee finds it has to exceed this amount, it must return to the council for further authority.

HOLD TAG DAY FOR CHILDREN

York County Children's Aid To Benefit From Appeal

In co-operation with York county council, municipal councils all through York county have again given their sanction to a tag week to be held for the benefit of the little children in the care of the York County Children's Aid Society.

While the statistics provide for the maintenance of these youngsters, of which the Society in York County has hundreds, there are added funds urgently required in order to give these unfortunate children a few bright hours or perhaps some little "extra" which may be the normal possession of children blessed with parental care in the usual way. Funds raised by tag week go entirely to the children.

Tag week in York county will be observed from September 18 to 25, and last week organization work was launched in order to put it across in a manner befitting the worthy object in view.

Service clubs, Junior and Senior Women's Institutes are taking hold of the work, and other clubs of young women, and these organizations will be depended on to do the tagging. By the manner in which organizations are taking hold of the work, no one is going to be overlooked by the girls with the boxes when they are on their rounds. It is felt the citizens of this community and district will welcome them with open arms, as it were, for who is there but would not give a bit of silver, or better still a dollar bill, to thrill the heart of a young child in need?

The "family" cared for by York County Children's Aid is a large one—running between 800 and 900—and those who are travelling about arranging to make them happy through the funds raised on this tag occasion, are giving their services entirely without charge, while other liberal-hearted citizens are loaning their automobiles and buying the gas out of their own pockets just to help.

HORROR ADVERTISING

The Ontario highways department's "horror" advertising campaign is naturally being accompanied by a good deal of discussion of highway driving. The horror advertising will undoubtedly have an effect, perhaps most of it through wives who will say: "Now George, be careful; remember that picture we saw in the paper this week." Dying under the wheels or at the wheel of an automobile has become so common that we are not shocked to the extent that we should be. To what extent should we be shocked? To the extent that such deaths are preventable. When children die, as they comparatively seldom do in Ontario today, of diphtheria or smallpox, we are shocked, because such deaths are preventable. When people die of cancer or heart conditions or strokes we are sorry but (except in the sudden death of people we know) we are not shocked, for it was probably not within our present knowledge to prevent these deaths.

Why We Don't Stop Deaths

But motor fatalities we know we can prevent. We could stop running automobiles or we could send a man with a flag along the highway in front of each car as was done in the early days. It is not feasible, however, to turn backward, for, aside from the usefulness of motor-cars, their manufacture is a source of a living for many people. What problem is there that is not tied up with the making of a living? The real reason that we do not prevent motor fatalities, through stricter driving tests, is that human lives are not really economically valuable. If we were living in a reasonable, orderly, society, every person's services would be in demand and would increase the wealth of the rest of us. A farmer's good fortune would not be dependent on the misfortunes of fellow farmers; he would not be poorly paid for his services just because all other farmers had good crops too. In a reasonable society a man would not be paid for not working. Every man would get a chance to do some productive work and his work would enrich not only himself but also all his fellow human beings. The average human being today is valued only as a consumer; he can be easily replaced as a producer. Society spends thousands of dollars rearing and educating men and women, and says that their lives are valuable, but they aren't really, and that's why we don't put an end to motor fatalities.

REPRISALS

Apparently Rt. Hon. Mackenzie King was misreported when it was said that he would not disallow Alberta legislation. Mr. King did disallow it. In explanation of his action it was said that the Alberta legislation was not only beyond the powers of the province but refused anyone the right to raise that point in the courts. It looked as though the dominion government had no choice but to disallow the legislation. But now Mr. Aberhart, as feared, declares that the dominion government has forced him to take further action. The further action is proclamation of a debt moratorium primarily affecting large financial corporations.

He Thinks It Over

One thing that we may be sure of is that Mr. King gave careful consideration to his action, whether he was right or wrong, wise or foolish. That is really the thing that Mr. King does best—looking before he leaps. A prominent Newmarket Conservative said the other day to the writer of this article, by way of illustrating his disapproval of Premier Mitchell Hepburn's colorful and precipitate actions, that he thoroughly approved of Mr. King's method of reaching a decision. He took advice. He sat down with his colleagues and said: "Now boys, what is the best thing to do?" He believed in the principle that two heads are better than one. This Newmarket Conservative said that this was not the method of either Mr. Bennett or Mr. Hepburn.

JOB INSURANCE

Unemployment insurance for Ontario is provided by Hon. Peter Heenan, member of the Hepburn administration. Such action is likely to be taken in conjunction with the dominion and the other provinces. Canada lags behind Britain, New Zealand and Australia (we believe) in this reform.

NO SCURVY FOR WEEKLIES

Members of the Canadian Weekly Newspapers Association who attended the recent convention at Halifax were made members of the Order of the Good Time. Elaborate certificates were given to each delegate and carry the information that the order was founded in 1800. We look at a school history and find that Port Royal, now Annapolis Royal, was founded by the French in 1605. We read: "After a plentiful harvest, the settlement faced the winter of 1606 with new hope. As the prospects brightened, Champlain conceived the idea of founding the Order of Good Cheer. Each man at his table was in turn appointed chief steward and made responsible for providing the meals for one day. Naturally, the keen rivalry to secure the best meals inspired much merriment among the company. The combination of good food and hearty cheer proved the best possible defence against scurvy." Nova Scotia's enterprising premier, Angus L. Macdonald, has apparently revived the old order for publicity purposes. We are glad to know that the weekly newspapermen are now protected against scurvy (or are we thinking of scurrility?)

SPEND MONEY HERE

York County Children's Aid Society announced another tag day. The Society, of course, is worth support, but it is also a fact that the money collected is spent here in town for board for wards.

COVETING NEIGHBOR'S DOG TAXES

The Stouffville Tribune notes that Newmarket collected $448 this year in dog taxes, and suggests that some of this money should be turned over to Whitechurch to help pay for sheep killed by Newmarket dogs. A Newmarket dog was caught over the line, says the Tribune, on certain occasions. In fact the Tribune would like the law amended to compel Newmarket to hand over this money. "After all," says the Tribune, "this tax was primarily collected to create a fund for paying farmers for damage done to their flocks. In towns and villages there are no sheep and the fund is used to defray ordinary expenses of the municipality."

Cast Mote From Own Eye

This law would hit Stouffville probably harder than it would hit Newmarket. For the one Newmarket dog which, according to the Tribune, likes Whitechurch mutton, there might be a dozen Stouffville dogs. Just think of the greater number of garbage cans provided for our dogs than for Stouffville dogs, and until recently our dogs had merely to go to the town dump for a foraging expedition. More than that, we doubt if a town-bred dog would care to worry sheep. We believe that a town dog would sooner take a good bite of automobile tire any day than to get his mouth full of sheep's wool.

LEGITIMATE LOBBYING

So there's going to be an election this fall. Now therefore is the time for all good citizens to bring to the attention of candidates, governments and prospective governments, things that need to be done. Did anyone, for instance, make a point of explaining to Hon. Earl Rowe on Monday, when he was attending the Lennox picnic, just why the Orangeville to Peterboro (proposed) highway is necessary, desirable and a good investment for his native province? We fancy that they did not, and that, if true, is sad, because it may be a long time until it so happens that Mr. Rowe is successfully attending race meets at Orangeville, Newmarket and Peterboro (or isn't Peterboro a racing town?).

While Close to the People

Mr. Hepburn and Mr. Baker have already been told about the desirability of this (proposed) new highway, and it is understood that they view the project favorably. With a little encouragement from the electorate, they will, we feel sure, be laying a provincial highway through this town or our neighbor town of Aurora. Then there is Major Alex. Mackenzie, down in Woodbridge, a nice gentleman if ever there was one. Now's the time to explain to him about this (proposed) highway of ours, while he is still close to the people.

An Exception

As a general thing, we don't like to see people thinking up ways for governments to spend money, and we like less to see people clamoring for money to be spent in their own backyards, but this isn't a case in point. This is a case of necessity. This is a case of a whole lot of municipalities spending sleepless nights and restless days over the lack of a "main artery of traffic," which would carry the very life-blood of central Ontario. The people of these parts are also worrying about all the gasoline tax that the government isn't getting but that it might be getting if it would just have the foresight and the business acumen to build this (proposed) highway.

ECUMENICAL

"In a word, the Quaker position is now ecumenical!" Having read pretty well through an article in the Christian Century, on the recent Oxford World Conference on Church, Community and State, when we came to this sentence, we had a pretty good idea what the word "ecumenical" meant, and living in this one-time Quaker community of Newmarket, we were quite interested. An ecumenical conference is a world conference, and the delegates at this Oxford conference were from most of the Protestant churches of the world and the Greek Catholic church. The conference drew up statements of the attitude of the church toward the community, the state, the economic order, education and the world of nations. Although Christianity in one country is often a very different thing from Christianity in another, this conglomeration of believers apparently reached surprising agreement.

Quakerism

But we were writing about the Quakers. One of the points on which the conference could not agree, except to state that there were two viewpoints, and to give each, was pacifism. The Christian Century suggests that the pacifists were either in the majority or the most effective hand-clappers. The Archbishop of York argued that there is such a thing as a just war and that a Christian may participate in such a war and still be a Christian. The pacifists, however, saw a great gain in the statement of their position on a parity with the war-list position. "It gives standing within the church for the conscientious objector, a status which has never been recognized since primitive times except by certain small bodies like the Quakers. In a word, the Quaker position is now ecumenical!"

Social Gospel Upheld

The writer of the Christian Century article believes that the biggest thing the conference has done is its statement concerning economic problems. The agreement apparently was that the church should not become a political party to achieve its Christian ends, nor should it be silent on social or economic issues. Where there are social injustices, it is up to the church to interpret the will of God. In other words, professing Christians, and not merely the clergy, cannot shut their eyes to economic and social cruelty. The statement is said to crown "with ecumenical approval the labors of our prophets of the social gospel."

The Amherstburg Echo, discussing campaign of the provincial department of highways says: "If the premier would instruct his magistrates to collect the driving permits of all those brought up for violation, who have clearly been drinking, it would go a long way to curb the number of serious accidents. Another thing the premier might do is to instruct his magistrates to take the word of the arresting officers in regard to whether a driver is under the influence of liquor or not, and disregard the opinions of many physicians who want to enter into a long explanation of the effects one or two drinks may have on a driver." We would add our suggestion that the premier restore the abolished beer and wine permits, and have his magistrates (if his magistrates they be) cancel permits as well as licenses.

The Common Round

By Isabel Inglis Colville

"Grandmothers"

Grandmothers have always had a fascination for me—maybe because the unknown lures us on—for my grandmothers had both travelled to the "land where dreams come true," before I could realize what I was losing; or it might be because I could see what a grandmother means in a child's life.

At any rate, where grandmothers congregate, there I want to be, and there I was, on Wednesday afternoon of last week, when the grandmothers of the Pine Orchard Institute took charge of the August meeting at the home of Mrs. Charles Flintoff, Newmarket.

Sixteen years ago, I think, a raw recruit, I joined the Institute. I felt it had something for me, and in August of that year I attended the grandmother's meeting at Mrs. Charles Flintoff's home, then at Pine Orchard.

On this last Wednesday, she told me, that with one exception, the Institute "Grandmothers' Day," has always been held at her home.

This year was no exception to the rule that this particular meeting is always particularly well attended.

I had good reason to know it would be, for our telephone rang exactly ten times that morning, all on Institute business—good Samaritans trying to find ways and means for everyone to get there.

This is a busy time on the farm, so I came to the conclusion that the men who dropped their work to take a car full of women to their destination must have had very tender memories of their grandmothers. One thing which struck me forcibly this year, as it did last, was the youth of some of the grandmothers.

My mother tells me that her mother was a grandmother at 42, but she didn't look it—we have a picture of her at that age—she looks old!

Of course, dress and our manner of life have a great deal to do with it, no doubt, for a grandmother of today can do anything from running for parliament to piloting a plane. But when I saw one young grandmother holding a baby, I knew that no matter how greatly the years may have changed a grandmother's exterior—the grandmotherliness was there in full force still.

The business part of last Wednesday's meeting went on as usual and at its conclusion Mrs. Hope gave over the chair to Mrs. W. Williams, convenor of the grandmothers' committee.

The singing of the Maple Leaf opened this part of the program, after which came the roll call "The thing I dislike most in

LET'S GO TO COLLEGE

The Furrow's End has got itself into trouble. Yes sir! When an aggressive young man read our contribution of last week he became so mad that he spent two hours discussing it with us. He even paid us the compliment of helping us eat our first corn of the season. All because he has been vitally concerned with the question: Which shall it be?

Last week we were tired when we completed and mailed the column. We wondered if it were really worthwhile. But our young friend states that he has never read anything on the subject of choosing an occupation. So he came and talked with us. He went home with the usual thoughtful expression on his face. He was encouraged; so were we.

Two problems faced our friend. Having had about equal standing in all his matriculation subjects, his most appropriate course is difficult to choose. Having very limited finances his mode of living while attending university is difficult to choose. After much thought he has set his heart on a certain course, bearing in mind that he may switch to a different course if he desires to do so at the end of his first year.

Three modes of living present themselves. He could ride back and forth by automobile with another person who commutes; this is the cheapest but most strenuous way. He could rent a room and "keep batch"; this is the most lonely and probably the most unhealthy way. He could secure room and board near the university; this is the most costly way. But the latter way has advantages if the problem of financing can be overcome. Last year 10 young men at the University of Toronto reduced this problem to a minimum. Through their co-operative residence they saved a quarter of their normal expenses on room and board. They had all the experiences of living together and of organizing a new venture. A foundation is laid for future activity with $35 made available for educational work and $110 placed in a reserve fund.

That the extra work entailed for the student in operating the residence did not interfere appreciably with academic work is shown by the fact that there were no failures and two of the undergraduate members won prizes and scholarships.

My two nights spent as a guest at the residence were very interesting. The students have comfortable quarters and pleasant nutritious meals. They are developing a fellowship which is only enjoyed by the college student living at the residence. They have some responsibilities which would add to the education of many university people.

Living alone in the garret tends to make one shy and apart from the rest of the university. Most young men would not thrive well on the meals which they might fry together in odd moments. Two hours is a lot of time to spend riding to and from Toronto. This much driving entails a mental and physical strain that when added to the effort required for a university course may prove exhausting.

But the greatest loss would probably be in the isolation from the extra university activities, whether they be of a formal or an informal nature. If I were going to University I would want to live at a co-operative residence.

Pecker Is Teased For Jealousy

BY RUTH DINGMAN HEBB

"Chillier this morning, isn't it?" remarked Chips, the Chickadee, brightly to some of his friends as they foraged merrily for their breakfast one August day.

"And more pleasant," agreed his pal, Chubby. "Although I'm always a bit hungrier in cooler weather and have to work a bit harder on the eating problem." "There'll be lots of goings and comings in windgum from now on," said Chips.

"Here comes Pecker," said Chubby. "I wonder what he wants." "Hello folks," Pecker greeted them. "I've just been chatting with Mr. Rose-breasted Grosbeak. He's here today you know."

"I'd like to see him," said Chubby. "He's such a handsome brute isn't he?" "Well, come on over and see him," suggested Pecker. "He and his family are over in that thicket away over there. I'll take you."

Chips and Chubby accompanied Pecker to the spot and were pleased to see the beautiful Grosbeak with his lovely black, white and rose suit. They proceeded to speak loudly and admiringly of his looks.

"Mrs. G. is certainly a plain little woman isn't she?" was Pecker's only comment.

"She's not so little," corrected Chips. "In fact she's bigger than you are yourself and quite a lot bigger than I am."

"She certainly looks like a striped Sparrow, anyway," insisted Pecker. "And just look at the children!"

"What's wrong with them?" asked Chubby. "They seem like nice intelligent children. They say that Grosbeak children are very clever. They leave the nest early and learn to sing when very young, too."

"So plain," said Pecker. "They certainly take after their mother more than their father so far."

"But Pecker, you know as well as I do that the young autumn males have not their permanent colors yet. That young chap there has a richness in his breast which distinguishes him from his sisters. You're just jealous of the Grosbeaks, I think, because they are beautiful in looks as well as being lovely singers."

"Nonsense," said Pecker. "I wouldn't be a Grosbeak for the world—with their great thick bills and their squeaky voices."

"You're being very childish about them I think," reproached Chubby. "Their call is a rather squeaky affair, but their song is a lovely rich warble. You just wish you could do as well. I'll bet."

Just then Mrs. Grosbeak spoke to her husband. "Shall we go over to that farmer's potato patch now, dear?" she asked. "I promised the children that we would have a treat of potato bugs this afternoon. They have been teasing me about it all day."

"Yes, we'll go right away, my love," said Father Grosbeak. "I just feel like a few potato bugs myself right now."

"You see they're useful birds too," said Chips, who was trying to get Pecker's goat. "And you can tell that Mr. Grosbeak is a model husband and father. They tell me that he stays faithfully near his wife while she is sitting on the eggs and he not only brings her food but even sits on the eggs. They have lovely pale-greenish, blue-speckled eggs."

"I know," said Pecker, "and I think he's a donkey to endanger the safety of his nest by staying so near it when he is such a conspicuous-looking fellow. It's a wonder his family weren't all eaten up by cats or hawks or some other marauder."

"Oh, come on and snap out of it, Pecker," urged Chips. "We all know that you are very wise even if you haven't got a bib and tucker."

"Come on and let's take our jealous friend away from the scene of the crime," suggested Chubby.

"CAPPY RICKS" STORY

COMES TO PALACE

That irascible but lovable old seafaring character created by Peter B. Kyne, "Cappy Ricks" comes to life on the screen in the comedy-drama "The Go-Getter" which will have its local premiere at the Palace theatre, Wednesday and Thursday, September 1 and 2.

Charles Winniger, well remembered as the "Capt'n Henry" of both stage and screen versions of "Show Boat," plays "Cappy" in this delightful movie.

He isn't the "go-getter." That individual is the tall handsome Irish star, George Brent, who is in love with Cappy's daughter, portrayed by the lovely blond star, Anita Louise. George and Anita carry the romantic interest of the show. But neither, nor both, can steal away the audience's attention from old "Cappy."

Brent is a member of the crew of the famous dirigible "Macon," which plunged into the Pacific Ocean a few years ago.

This plunge is shown on the screen—one of the most astonishing things the movies have ever done. Bill Austin—the character played by Brent—loses a leg in the accident, is mastered out of the navy, and must find himself a job in civil life. "That's how he meets Cappy Ricks and 'Cappy' daughter. He is put through all sorts of tests by 'Cappy' and the girl before he wins them both over. But he does win them and that's the story of "The Go-Getter."

TRINITY PASTOR LAID TO REST

A striking tribute to the high regard in which the late Rev. J. H. Wells was held by his associates in the ministry was the attendance of a large number of clergy, from all parts of the province, at the public service held at Trinity United church on Friday afternoon.

The service followed a private service at the parsonage. After the service interment took place at Burford, near Brantford.

Representing Toronto Centre presbytery of the United Church and also Toronto conference, Rev. C. E. Fockler, Keswick, acting presbytery chairman, spoke briefly at the public service in tribute to Mr. Wells and conveyed the sympathy of the presbytery and conference.

Rev. Dr. A. J. Irwin, of the Ontario Temperance Federation, gave a prayer. Rev. Dr. W. J. Mumford, Toronto, read the lesson, and Rev. Simon Edwards, who had been associated with Mr. Wells at Paris, Ont., gave the address. He declared that Mr. Wells had been a good preacher, but that he was "seen at his best in his home," speaking of his "tones of affection" and his "beautiful manners."

"This sermon should have a note of triumph," declared Dr. Mumford in closing.

Rev. T. W. F. G. Andrews, Brampton, predecessor of Mr. Wells here, said, before pronouncing the benediction, "Knowing this congregation as I do, and knowing the depth of their love, I am sure it is extended to those who are bereft."

Among those who attended the service here was Hon. George S. Henry, former premier of the province.

Pallbearers were C. F. Willis, W. H. Helmer, C. A. Lepard, H. B. Marshall, Robert Manning and George D. Wark.

Among others going to Burford were Rev. H. W. Strapp, Kettleby, J. R. Y. Broughton, Fred Penrose, Sr. and Fred Penrose, Jr.

Rev. Mr. Edwards conducted the service at the cemetery, assisted by Rev. Mr. Draper.

In the course of the service Mr. Edwards read James Whitcomb Riley's poem, "Away":

I cannot say, and I will not say That he is dead! He is just away! With a cheery smile, and a wave of the hand,

He has wandered into an unknown land, And left us dreaming how very fair It must be, since he lingers there.

And you, O you, who the wildest yearn For the old-time step and the glad return,

Think of him faring on, as dear In the love of There as the love of Here;

Mild and gentle as he was brave, When the sweetest love of his life he gave

To simple things: where the violets grew Pure as the eyes they were likened to.

The touches of his hands have strayed As reverently as his lips have prayed.

Think of him still as the same, I say; He is not dead, he is just away!

Canada's Favourite Tea "SALADA" TEA

CROPS TERMED SATISFACTORY

"Very satisfactory," was the answer given by Fred Smith of the Newmarket Farmers Co-operative, in response to The Era's inquiry concerning local crop prospects.

"The wheat yield is good, averaging between 35 and 40 bushels to the acre," he stated. "This is being taken from the farmers now at $1 a bushel. While oats and barley have suffered a little from rust, there is time for much of the crop to improve."

"The farmer can profitably feed hogs at the present time," Mr. Smith said. "There will be no immediate improvement in the price of beef, however, because of the western cattle being shipped in and the ample pasturage for cattle here."

"Look at that field," said Mr. Smith, pointing to the flats beside the Office Specialty. "A good crop of hay has been taken off that, and there is already a good half-crop for the second cutting."

"The vegetable crop is very good, and potatoes, especially in sandy soil, should be a fine crop."

While the local farmers are in a better position than last year, many of them are not out of the woods yet, The Era learned. Some will have bills from last winter to clear off.

"Generally speaking, the purchasing power of the farmers in the district has improved," Mr. Smith concluded.

She—"The world is full of rascals; this morning the milkman gave me a counterfeit half dollar."

He—"Where is it, my dear?"

She—"Oh, I've already got rid of it—luckily the butcher took it."

Conclude

"Well, what did our eminent statesman have to say?" asked the editor.

"Nothing," replied the reporter. "Very well. Keep it down to a column."

Eastern Canada's Giant Earner

Dairy products brought farmers of Eastern Canada more than $171,000,000 during 1936. This represents over 40% of the total farm income for Quebec, Ontario and the Maritime Provinces. It is more income than is produced by any other single farm product—ten times as much as from wheat and more than double the revenue from oats.

For thousands of farm families milk is a year-around source of money, a steady dependable income paid each month or oftener. To make this steady income possible, people must be reminded constantly of the goodness of milk and milk products. Borden helps to do this job by keeping milk foremost in the minds of millions of buyers, making over larger markets for dairy products.

MY EFFICIENT COUSIN ANN

Frank Farrington

The brakes screeched as Nicholas Warren shoved the pedal clear to the floor board. The rear end of the sedan he was driving skidded to the left as the tires ceased rolling and slid along the concrete. A clash of metal on metal rent the air. His car had "side-swiped" a roadster driven by a pretty girl who had turned into the side street just as Nicholas was about to come out of that street.

The collision had damaged a fender on each car, but neither driver was hurt and no other harm was done. The girl, Ann Grady, hopped from her car and walked around the sedan. "If you'd keep your brakes properly adjusted, Nick," she said, "you wouldn't have accidents like this."

"My brakes are all right," retorted Nicholas. "I stopped before I got to the stop sign, didn't I?"

"Yes, you stopped, but your brakes don't pull evenly. The rear of your car switched to the left and that's what caused the accident."

"The lady is right," declared an officer who had arrived on the scene. "Do you want to make a complaint against this young man?"

"No, he's only my cousin Nick," Ann replied. "He'll pay for having my fender fixed, and that's all there'll be to it. He may be short of spending money for a while, but it will be good for him."

"If that's a joke, it's a lousy one," said Nicholas irritably. "You know I haven't a cent and just have to hang around and live on my father. His car is damaged just as much as yours, and if I was going to pay for either, it would be his I'd pay for."

"Tut, tut Nick! What a way to talk to your cousin!" Ann climbed back into her roadster and a group of spectators stood around, smiling at the incident and obviously siding with the girl.

"Yeah, my efficient cousin Ann," Nicholas put a world of sarcasm into the word efficient. "She knows all about everything, from a full floating axle to a Neanderthal man. Good night."

Ann smiled as she kicked her starter pedal and rolled away, leaving Nicholas trying to start his engine after flooding the carburetor. He was further irritated by the unsympathetic comments from the crowd, and from Benjamin Floyd, his companion, who had stayed in the sedan, observing proceedings without taking part.

"Ann's a corking fine girl," said Benjamin. "I don't see why you're always so sore at everything she says and does."

"She's too efficient, that's what's the matter," returned Nicholas. "She knows how to do everything. She gives me a pain."

At last Nicholas rolled away, his face red with self-consciousness as the crowd applauded when his engine started.

"I don't care; I think you're lucky to have a cousin like Ann," continued Benjamin. "I could fall for her any old time."

"Yeah, you would, but you aren't her cousin, and she doesn't bob up always at just the time to make you feel like a dunce. Now do you know the latest thing she's doing? She's singing in our choir. Good night! Ann singing! Why, she never sang a note till last winter."

"All the same, you can count on it, she'll be good," declared Benjamin. "If she's taken up singing, believe me, she'll be a singer."

"She'd get away with murder," said Nicholas sourly. "She'll know every note in the book and have 'em all so they'll come and eat out of her hand. But she gives me a pain. If she's a singer, I'm a millionaire—and I haven't two nickels to rub together."

"You'll go on getting sorer and sorer, Nick, till you'll be trying to get her out of the choir."

"I might at that. I'm about fed up with having Ann tell me how to do everything, from adjusting brakes to singing the tenor part in an anthem. Either she gets out of the choir or I do, and I'm telling you, it won't be me that gets out."

Ann and Nicholas were not only cousins, but they were equal heirs to whatever estate their grandfather, old Hiram Grady, had left. The old man had been supposed to be wealthy, but at his death little of value had been found, save the old homestead and its furnishings.

Thus far that had netted the two heirs only the income from their respective shares since the principal sum would not be paid to them until the following year, when both became of age.

Grandfather Grady. That's one time I wouldn't object to her being right."

"Where could the things be?" asked Benjamin.

"Don't ask me. Ask Ann. We know he was in the habit of putting lots of money into valuable jewellery. He thought diamonds were just about the best investment. But what became of all of 'em, nobody knows. We couldn't find a sign of 'em, and we've looked high and low."

"Why, there must be a secret cupboard somewhere," said Benjamin, with interest.

"No, sir. We turned that place inside out. There isn't a place in that house as big as a gnat's ear that we haven't looked into. Either somebody robbed the old man or he got rid of the stuff before he died. It's gone and nobody but Ann claims we'll ever see it."

"Well, Ann is always right. You say so yourself."

"Yeah, she's always right, but this time she's wrong. Anyway, she goes out of the church choir, or I do."

"If that's so, my guess is that you go," Benjamin was not afraid to say.

"Maybe so and maybe not. Wait and see," and Nicholas started for the house, while Benjamin went on home.

"Your choir leader was just calling you on the telephone," said Mrs. Warren as Nicholas went in. "I think it's something about some anthem for Sunday."

For the moment even the damaged fender was forgotten. He went to the telephone. Soon he returned. "She wants me to come right over and bring Ann," he said. "Why did she have to give Ann a duet with me? Well, I'll get Ann and we'll go across the river in the skiff."

The Grady's and the Warrens lived in adjoining houses and their lots reached back to the river. The choir leader lived straight across the river in a suburb called Brooklyn. It took but a few minutes to row across, while it was a mile around by the bridge, through traffic.

Nicholas ran through the hedge between the two lots and called to Ann.

"Where are the oars?" she asked as she met him at the river a few minutes later.

"I supposed they were down here," replied Nicholas. "Never mind, I'll use this pole." He picked up a pole lying there.

"It's too short to reach bottom out in the middle," Ann warned him.

"I can get along with it all right," he declared. "Hop in and sit down and cut out the back-seat driving."

Ann took her seat demurely and Nicholas pushed off. "All right she said, but don't be long."

TREASURE HUNT

—By Barbara Webb

SYNOPSIS

Belinda Louise (Lindy Lou) Hillcrest received a letter in New York telling her of treasure hidden at Twinoaks her former home in the south. She confided the news to handsome Anton Homans, who laughed at it and forbade Lindy Lou's going to search for the treasure. He asked Lindy Lou to marry him, and the day after they became engaged left on a long sales trip. Now Lindy Lou is at Twinoaks firmly resolved to find the treasure. On her arrival there she renews acquaintance with young Lee Beverly, whose farm adjoins Twinoaks. Lee helps Lindy Lou in various ways, but disapproves of her staying alone at Twinoaks. He sends his cook to spend the night at the house and the two women are terrified by strange noises. The next morning Lee points out evidence of prowlers to Lindy Lou and gets her to promise that she will hereafter stay in the village at night.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

Getting Nearer the Treasure
Despite the shock, Lindy Lou tried not to feel too much disturbed by this evidence. A little thinking aroused her stubbornness. "I'll beat whoever is around here to it," she vowed. "It's my treasure, and nothing's going to keep me from having it."

At noon Mose had finished only one hole. He went back to the house to sit in the shade of a tree and eat the lunch he had brought with him. Lindy Lou waited until he was out of sight, and then stepped into the excavation he had made. She kicked around with the toe of her shoe, stopped and sifted the loose earth in her fingers. Nothing, not a sign that the earth here had ever been moved before.

With a sigh she went back to the house and ate her own lunch. Presently Mose plodded back to the pigsty. Feeling secure now that he was on the place, Lindy Lou went upstairs and took a nap. It was after 3 when she woke, hearing a knocking down below. It was Mose. "I done finished them holes, Missy," he said. "Good big post holes I done digged for you. I got to go along now, cows to milk at the Beeches, and Mr. Lee ain't comin' back till late."

Lindy Lou came downstairs and watched him jog off along the road. Then she took out her map once more.

"Where could this place marked in the house be?" she wondered. Carefully she paced the distance through the front hall and back into what was once called the back parlor. There was a fireplace here, and suddenly Lindy Lou's heart gave a great leap.

"In the fireplace chimney, of course. Why, people were always hiding things under the bricks on the hearth."

She knelt and tugged at one. It would not come up, but it was loose.

"The pickax will get them up," thought Lindy Lou exultantly, and she ran to get it from the front porch. "I have a feeling," thought Lindy Lou, "that I'm going to find my treasure this very evening."

Just as Lindy Lou grasped the pickax a horse and buggy drove up and stopped at her gate. A lanky man climbed out of the buggy and came up the path.

"Good evening, Miss Lindy Lou," he said. "Lee Beverly told me to stop by and pick you up when I was ready to go back to town. I reckon you don't remember me. But many's the time I've stopped here on my route when your pa and ma had this place."

"You're the postman," said Lindy Lou. "I don't remember your name, my brother Lee and I always called you Mr. Postman. I don't think we ever did know your real name."

"Johnson, Lemuel Johnson," he told her. "How is your pa and ma?"

"Very well," Lindy Lou replied, wishing he had arrived at any other moment but this one, "and I expect them down here soon. Papa got sick just before we planned to start south and I came on alone."

"Fixin' to live here again," he inquired.

"I'm not sure," Lindy Lou answered. "It depends on a good many things." Which was true enough, she reflected.

He mopped his face with a large handkerchief. "If your baggage is ready, Miss Lindy Lou, I'll carry it out for you, and we'd better be getting on. Soon be sundown and I got my chickens to feed. My old woman's gone on a visit to her folks and I'm doing for myself these days."

Lindy Lou hesitated. If only she could remain at Twinoaks another hour or so, and dig up those bricks on the hearth. Suppose she left now and whoever was prowling around came in in the night and got the treasure from the fireplace ahead of her. She decided to play for time.

"I can't quite go right now, Mr. Johnson. I've got to wait here for about an hour. But suppose you take my things in for me, and then I'll either walk into the village, or I'll catch a ride from some one passing along. And you can tell Mrs. Jackson not to wait supper for me."

He scratched his head doubtfully. "I don't know, Miss Lindy Lou, as I like to leave you here now. It's gettin' late in the day and I seen Mose goin' back to the Beeches as I came along. Mr. Lee was downright certain about my taking you in to Threeforks when he spoke to me this morning. I don't like to go against what Mr. Lee says."

"I'm sure it will be all right," said Lindy Lou with her brightest smile. "I'll bring my bags down for you," and without giving him time to protest further she went in the house and up the stairs to the room where she had slept the night before. She came down carrying her dressing case and bag and put them into Mr. Johnson's unwilling hands.

"Now you go right along, I'll be leaving here very soon, and if I feel too tired I'll go over to the Beeches and ask Mose to hitch up and drive me in."

The postman's face brightened. "Well, now, if you're going to do that, I won't mind leaving you. Their plenty of rigs and horses over at the Beeches and I reckon Mr. Lee don't mind putting himself out for you."

He grinned at her as he finished his speech and Lindy Lou flushed. Of course every one at Threeforks would couple her name with Lee's, and since she wasn't going to speak of her engagement to Anton, there was nothing she could do about it. Mr. Johnson went out to the rig, put Lindy Lou's bags in, waved his hand, clucked to his horse and moved off.

Lindy Lou hurried back into the house, pick-ax in hand. The bricks came up easily enough at first, but the closer Lindy Lou got to the fire-place proper the harder it was to pry them out. She was so absorbed in her work that she didn't see the shadows getting longer and longer, until twilight fell and she could hardly see what she was doing. With a sigh she straightened herself. She had found nothing, but the feeling persisted that she would find something, and she decided to light a lamp and go on by its light.

She went to the kitchen, struck a match, and felt her first nervousness at the gloomy surroundings its light revealed. But she lighted the lamp and went back through the hall carrying it. For another hour she worked, and by this time had exposed a large hole which yawned empty back at her. There came then the realization that she was very tired, very hungry and, to be honest, very scared. For the first time she thought of the lonely walk ahead of her to Threeforks. And thinking of it she was not at all sure she could even find her way to the Beeches to ask for company or a horse to drive her in.

It was while she was thinking of this that she grew rigid and stifled a scream. Overhead were footsteps, very soft creeping ones, but footsteps just the same. And then, completely unheeding her, came the wail and moan she had heard the night before. Lindy Lou stood still, and when she could gather herself together a little, found herself growing angry.

She knew, of course, after Lee's discovery of the morning, that the wail was caused by human agency. Under cover of the noise she made with the pick-ax at the fireplace some one had slipped in, back to the attic, and put the wind harp in position again. Lindy Lou blew out her light and stood in the darkness. She was angry now, and she wanted to find that treasure. The house was quiet again and Lindy Lou knew an access of courage.

She stooped and picked up a brick in each hand for a weapon. Her plan was very simple. She would run out of the house, across the porch, along the walk and through the gate. This would tell the intruder that she was gone. But instead of proceeding to the Beeches or to the village, she meant to creep quietly back to the house, surprise the prowler, throw the bricks at him if necessary and then try to lock him in one of the empty rooms.

This would dispose of him for good and all, for she would at once turn him over to the Sheriff and then she would be left in peace.

Afterward Lindy Lou wondered how she found the courage to go back to the house, for go back she did after carrying out the first part of her plan. Noiselessly she skirted the house, keeping in the shadows. She went in through the kitchen, stopping to listen at every step. She got into the lower hall and then caught her breath triumphantly. A faint glimmer of light showed upstairs, probably a flashlight, thought Lindy Lou wishing she had one.

Up the stairs she went. Some one was in the room where she had slept the night before. It would be the work of a minute only to pull that door shut and hold on to it with all her strength. She might be able to get a brick between the knob and the door frame to hold it fast. And she could surely threaten to shoot any one who tried to come out. The prowler couldn't know that she had no gun.

She leaned back against the wall, and then, just as she was prepared to dart forward and make a prisoner of that soft-footed burglar a circle of light caught her, throwing her into relief against the wall. The next instant arms seized her, pushed her backward into an empty room so hard she stumbled and fell. And as she picked herself up she heard the key turn in the lock.

Lindy Lou was a prisoner in her own house.

Lindy Lou lay against the door terrified and panting with fear and exertion. The house was still as a tomb again. She got to her feet for the second time and tried the door. Locked, and Lindy Lou was glad of it. She wondered how they had a key to this door and then decided that whoever was also searching for the treasure had removed all the keys before her arrival. That would account for the fact that she had been unable to lock the room where she had slept the night before.

She pressed her hands against her breast to try to still the pounding of her heart. Under the door showed a thin gleam of light, and once more there was the muffled sound of footsteps, pausing there now. Lindy Lou tried to shriek but could not find her voice. The door knob turned. And Lindy Lou for the first time in her life lost consciousness and slipped to the floor in a deep faint.

How long she lay there she never knew. Her watch had a plain dial and there was no light at all in the room. But she came back to consciousness finally and lay on the bare floor trying to remember what had happened. Very slowly realization of her plight recurred to her, and shivering now with fear and cold she crouched there on the floor.

Only one comforting thought came to her. Whoever had locked her in meant no real harm to her. "He's had time to finish me off more than once," she thought dimly, "but it looks like he just wanted to get me out of the way."

That, too, would explain the planting of the wind harp in the attic. It was a device simply to frighten her from further search in the house. Lindy Lou dragged herself across the room to the window. It was shattered and Lindy Lou knew that she would never dare to open it. There was no porch under this window so getting out would be impossible. But Lindy Lou thought she would feel better if she could see even one star.

The wind was rising now and Lindy Lou heard again that mournful wail and its accompanying moan. It did not frighten her so badly this time, knowing as she did the cause of the noise. But it added to her nervousness and she found herself straining her ears for other sounds. They came. Some one was still moving around upstairs, but she saw no further light.

Presently she heard a pounding and after a while located it as coming from downstairs.

"He's working at that chimney where I was this afternoon," she thought.

The afternoon! It seemed a million years away now to Lindy Lou. If only she had kept her promise to Lee and gone off with the postman. At that moment Lindy Lou felt she would gladly give a thousand treasures to be safe in bed at Mrs. Jackson's boarding house.

BOLT STRIKES
VALUABLE COW

A very severe electric storm occurred last Thursday afternoon, and the hydro and telephone wires were out of commission until well into Friday. The lights were off again Friday night because of a storm.

The most serious damage was done when the lightning struck and killed a valuable registered cow, belonging to Fred Knights. The cow was in the stable and the barn is rodded.

Everyone was thankful there was nothing worse done as Mr. Abbs had just shut down his machine after threshing and the men were all in the stable. Clifford Gordon came very near getting struck as he was standing close to the cow that was killed. A cow on the other side was stunned.

Haughty Woman: "Did any of your ancestors do things to cause posterity to remember them?"

Farmer: "I reckon they did. My grandfather put mortgage on this place that aren't paid off yet!"

HONOURABLE EARL ROWE
States His Party's Stand on Labor

The national policy of the Liberal-Conservative Party, Provincial and Dominion, for many years has been to create industry for the purpose of providing work and wages for labor and a profitable home market for the farmer; the lumberman and other primary producers. The Party's sympathetic attitude towards labor is evidenced by the Social legislation on our statute books.

The Liberal-Conservative Party believes that labor should receive a fair share of the fruits of industry and is entitled to organize in order to improve the lot of the worker as regards wages, hours, security in old age and all other conditions of industrial life. The Liberal-Conservative Party reaffirms its traditional policy of insisting upon the maintenance of law and order in all industrial disputes and pledges itself firmly and scrupulously to uphold the laws of Canada.

The Liberal-Conservative Party in Ontario stands for the following:

1. The right of employees to bargain collectively through their own representatives chosen without dictation, coercion or intimidation.
2. It is and has for many decades been a fact that both capital and labor are international in their organization. Accordingly the right of the worker to belong to the union of his choosing, Canadian or International, craft or industrial, is fully established; provided always that the unions must observe, and that capital must observe, in all their actions, the laws of Canada.
3. The Liberal-Conservative Party is unalterably opposed to the introduction into Ontario of sit-down strikes, sabotage or other violations of our law, and for the purpose of clarity hereby places itself on record as being opposed to such illegalities whether they are introduced into Ontario by labor unions affiliated with the C. I. O., the A. F. of L., or any other organization, capital or labor.
4. That representatives from other countries, both of capital and labor, shall be subject on the same principles as other people to our immigration laws and that they shall when admitted to this country, strictly observe the laws of the land.
5. The primary function of the state in all industrial disputes is FIRST—to take no sides and to maintain law and order without the display of unnecessary or provocative force, and SECOND, to enact and impartially administer adequate legislation for the conciliation of industrial disputes.
6. The right to work in Canada is not dependent upon membership in any organization.
7. That no strike shall take place until all reasonable methods of conciliation are exhausted and the worker should have the right of secret ballot free from improper influence or coercion in all decisions relating to the dispute.
8. The Liberal-Conservative Party will continue in the future as in the past to defend the principle of freedom of association within the law. The party re-affirms its belief that the essence of democracy is trust in the people and to rely on freedom and not in dictatorship, that public opinion may be led but not driven and that the greatest safeguard of orderly progress and reform is the sound common sense of all classes of the Canadian people.

I have stated frankly and fearlessly my party's policy toward labor and law enforcement. I stand now, as always, for law and order, for all, under all circumstances. This policy is the democratic British method and I shall apply these principles in the administration of our provincial affairs.

Leader of the Liberal-Conservative Party in Ontario
